Rather, the executive acquired power over the course of the Convention, a pattern of accretion that would become familiar to later generations of Americans. The breakdown in separation of powers, checks and balances, and federalism in the nation, caused by a government that legislates without Congress, has significantly damaged the processes of deliberative republicanism and the operational sovereignty of public opinion that these processes are intended to achieve. Noticed I closed my feed... The question, rather, is how we use it and whether we the biggest irony of course was -- is that those who betrayed these values were themselves the children of immigrants.
