They also brim with tenderness, humor, and occasional gleams of hope. Yet many of these poems are not in the individual confessional vein for which Kaur is known and celebrated. You write profoundly about politics, especially progressive politics. There were some real beauties in that rose garden. It is perhaps telling that only the second, broader, and more general half of the poem went viral, rather than the first, which alludes to war crimes and conflict in Somalia and Kenya. Thus, we can say "None of this soup tastes good" and "None of these apples are rotten".
